Danetka 4

Answer

- In the 20th century, when television was still black and white, cameras used red filters that absorbed the red color in the image, so red lipstick did not set off the lips. Therefore, the announcers on television, when putting on makeup, for expressiveness, had to paint their lips with green lipstick

Danetka 5

- The German police are completely confused. For 15 years now, the same person has been committing thefts, murders and thefts. By 2008, they had spent 14,000 working hours and more than 15 million euros to find the perpetrator, but they never found him. How is it possible?

Answer

- The main suspect was a woman whose DNA was found at every site. But it was not possible to find her.
- These cases took place throughout Germany, and sometimes beyond its borders - in France and Austria.
- In 2009, the police finally found a 71-year-old Polish woman who worked for many years as a packer of cotton swabs in a Bavarian factory. The factory produced many DNA test sticks which were used in police investigations.

Danetka 6

- George was late for math class and misunderstood the teacher. Because of this, he received an award and recognition! What happened?

Danetka 6

Answer

- The American mathematician George Danzig was once very late for a class and, seeing the tasks on the board, decided that this was a homework assignment. It took him several days to solve and eventually he found the answers. As it turned out, he found the key to two “unsolvable” problems that many mathematicians struggled with.
