When you start improving your fitness, strength, and suppleness, only then you'll be able to bring more knowledge and understanding on how to ride a horse comfortably. People often go round and round and round in circles and don't get any better at riding horse because they don't realize that horses also get tired just like them. At Dressage Clinic, we teach our riders about how to handle a horse when they are tired and need variety in their work.

Create Challenge

While riding your horse if you don't challenge yourself to achieve a specific target, then you're not going to learn it quickly. Creating a challenge and achieving it is a top priority when you're practicing to become a dressage rider. At Dressage Clinic, the professional give a target to the riders after practice so that they try hard to achieve it as well as understand how to understand the horse while riding it.

Make it Fun

The more you try to make it fun, the more it will get easier for you. Yeah, that's true! If you take dressage training as a part of a game, you'll enjoy it more and learn faster because when we play games, we put our hundred percent into it. If you make things a little competitive, it will encourage you to do better.
