

Useful and harmful features of the Internet

“English self study”

“Family psychology” Abdaliyeva Umidabonu

The word "Internet" is an English phrase that means "international data network" in our language. But since the name was coined, as the Internet has continued to evolve, it has become more than just providing and receiving information, it has the potential to do even more. In all walks of life, using the internet has been divided into benefits of ease, cheapness, and speed.

It's hard for modern youth to imagine their lives around the world. The Internet has penetrated hard into the lives of everyone, institutions and businesses. Even children consider the Internet an important part of life.

Investigating the use and harm of the Internet, scientists and doctors disagree. No one denies that the internet has simplified a lot of things. It was easier for students and students to read because they had free access to a large amount of learning materials. Businesses can now communicate faster and faster. Everyone can enjoy spending time online without leaving home. Social networks allow you to communicate with people all over the world.

At the same time, doctors warn that the Internet contributes to the development of various diseases. The availability of the Internet increases the amount of time spent on the computer. And, you know, it's the cause of many diseases, it's a lifestyle designed to live. Problems with visual, cervical spine and posture disorders also increase with the increase in the number of active Internet users.

The main benefit of the Internet for schoolchildren is the availability of educational information. In short, writing lectures, finding materials for creative work has become much easier. At the same time, access to an array of finished products and homework has been opened, which reduces the creative potential of students.

In addition, the emergence of social networks has led to the transformation of communication from the real world into a virtual one. The biggest problem with the internet is that it causes children to become addicted because their psyche is not fully developed. Children need to know how to use the global network properly and how to spend time profitably on the Internet. Although face-to-face chatting with friends and walking down the street can be much more rewarding.

Children's use of the internet and computers should be managed wisely and carefully. Adolescents need to be properly monitored on a regular basis to ensure proper use of the internet. In such cases, children should not be neglected. The computer and telephone equipment they use must be constantly monitored. Because a child can explore and use various seductive sites on the street from friends or acquaintances. Games that a child plays on the internet or on a computer should be mind-boggling and promote good manners. Parents will have to work constantly so that their time is not wasted.

Thank you for attention