"The Sunday Post" is a weekly newspaper published in Dundee, Scotland by DC Thomson, and characterised by a 'folksy' mix of news, sentimental stories and short features. The paper was founded in 1914 and has a wide circulation across Scotland and parts of Northern England. 2007 has seen DC Thomson launch an advertising drive for "The Sunday Post", primarily utilised on buses, in which the exclamation "Strip Sensation!" is seen by a picture of the folded paper displaying its masthead; next to this is the tagline punning on the exclamation: "A thoroughly decent read". In the 1950s, when the paper was confined largely to Scotland, sales of the Sunday Post in the country were so high that it was recorded in the Guinness Book of Records as the newspaper with the highest per capita readership penetration of anywhere in the worldFact|date=August 2008.

The Exchange-Rate Between Love and Money

By Thomas Leveritt
Harvill Secker, €19

992

Painter and novelist Thomas Leveritt's first book is set in Sarajevo, where the author has worked and lived. It's a strange concoction of thriller and satire, set in a city awash with "reconstruction funds" and bedevilled with fortune hunters set on getting a share of the money that's flowing around.

Having lost their chance at riches in the 2001 dot-com collapse, friends Bannerman and Frito arrive with similar money-making plans. When both of them fall for the same UN prosecutor, their lives are set on a bizarre course that will see them tried for war crimes themselves. Leveritt's style is youthful, energetic and a little florid.
