Mental Health: The Profession Tests Its Limits

By RICHARD L. CLAY

NEW YORK (AP) — The mental health profession is testing its limits as it grapples with the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks. The profession is being challenged by the sheer volume of trauma and grief that has been inflicted on the nation. Many mental health professionals are reporting a high level of stress and burnout. Some are questioning their ability to help their clients, while others are finding new ways to provide support. The profession is also being challenged by the need to provide care to a wide range of people, from first responders to the general public. The profession is being tested in ways that it has never before experienced.
