Built directly into solid rock, it is also known as the Church of the Rock and Rock Church.

The image shows the interior of the Temppeliaukio Church in Helsinki, Finland. The architecture is characterized by its minimalist design, featuring a circular dome with a wooden ceiling and numerous windows. The walls are made of granite, and the floor is also made of wood. The lighting is warm and natural, highlighting the textures of the materials.

• Design from the barren North

- Nordic design is famous for its simplicity and minimalism. The interior of the Temppeliaukio Church is a great example of this. Since the rocks serve as walls and much granite is incorporated into the interior, the natural surroundings are given their proper due. The numerous windows (180) in the dome create a beautiful interplay of sunlight and shadow.

Progressive design

In 1961, the Finnish architect brothers Timo and Tuomo Suomalainen submitted the winning design. The jury found the idea to be 'completely original' and was pleased with the proposal in which the original rocks could remain in place to some degree. However, the residents of Helsinki were not as enthusiastic about the design and preferred a traditional chapel.

Progressive design

The 'Rock Church' was too reminiscent of a mosque or even a 'diabolical bunker'. Due to the resistance, construction did not begin until 1968. After the completion and inauguration of the church one year later, it did not take long before Temppeliaukio was embraced by all and the church became one of the highlights of the city.
