Flag Of Australia

The flag of Australia was first approved in 1901 after the creation of the Australian Union. The blue color of the canvas itself is not only a traditional symbol of honesty and fidelity, but also the ocean, which is surrounded by the country from all sides. The flag of Great Britain indicates the historical colonial affiliation of Australia.

Five white stars accurately depict the constellation of the Southern Cross, which is the brightest in the sky of the southern hemisphere.

The Commonwealth Star, located under the British flag, has seven rays, six of which are states of the country.
