A little bit of history

Origins of Halloween Traditions
curiosity.com

Trick-or-Treating
On All Souls' Day in England, people would give out pastries in exchange for prayers for dead relatives.

Masks & Costumes
Ancient Celts would wear masks to avoid being recognized by ghosts.

Orange & Black
In pagan harvest celebrations, orange symbolizes crops and black represents the death of summer.

Jack O' Lantern
Scary faces were carved into turnips and potatoes in the Middle Ages to ward off evil spirits.

WHY DO WE CELEBRATE HALLOWEEN?

Hundreds of years ago, the Celtic people lived in regions that are now Ireland, Britain and Northern France. This was long-long back, even before the Jesus Christ. The Celts had a tradition of remembering those who had died and keeping the evil spirits peaceful. They did this every year on 31st October and was called Samhain. But their practices were opposed to the Christian way. So, nearly seven hundred years after Christ, the Head of the Catholic Church moved an important Christian day, the All Saints' Christian Day to 1st November. He thought everyone would forget about Samhain. All Saints' Day is a Christian Festival in honor of all the saints in heaven.

However, people didn't forget about Samhain. Since November 1st was the day of celebrating the Holy Spirits, the evening before that became the Holly Evening or All Hallow Even which later became Halloween.

Dressing up as spirits and ghosts became a part of the All Saints Day celebration because people who celebrated Samhain believed that wearing scary costumes would scare away the evil spirits and keep them away.

They also carve the pumpkin and keep it outside their homes to ward off the evil spirits.
