Questions.
1Why are scientists worried about Cumbre Vieja?
2How long would it take the wave to reach the African coast?
3Why would Europe be in less danger than America?
 4How big would the wave be when it reached Portugal?
5Why would it travel a long way inland in the Caribbean and South America?
6What can scientists do to predict the eruptions?
 Answers Less than one hour.
Because the side of the volcano faces west, across the Atlantic.
 It would be 12metres high.
Because the coast is very flat.
They can put better equipment on Cumbre Vieja.
Scientists fear that when the volcano erupts, one side of the volcano could collapse and fall into the sea. It would cause the biggest tsunami ever recorded in history.
