What is a family?

A family is a community based on the marriage of spouses who are connected spiritually, by a common way of life and mutual moral responsibility. The concept of family is quite voluminous, and its clear scientific definition is rather difficult.

How families appear?

The family appeared when the exchange of excess product in a pair ceased to be equivalent. The man was able to give the woman more than he received from her, directing the surplus to the maintenance of children.

Who are parents?

The role of parents in relation to a child is complex and profound and varies depending on culture, religion and people. Parents as educators are also responsible for the behavior of their child in society. Thus, the upbringing of children depends on the well-being of each person. A child deprived of parents is defined as an orphan.
