1) Introduction

Labor day is an annual holiday to celebrate the achievements of workers. On 1 May of every year, there is a holiday for workers in most countries. Labor day has its own origins in the labor union movements, specifically the eight hour day movement, which advocated eight hours for work, eight hours for recreation, and eight hours for rest.

2) Labor Day in Lebanon

Labor day, that is also known as the May Day, is considered as a public holiday in Lebanon. Some countries celebrate labor day in a different date than 1 May, and there are other countries that do not celebrate at all. In Lebanon, Labor day is a day off for all the general population, schools and most business are closed.

3) History of Labor Day

The first May Day celebrations focused on workers took place on May 1st 1890 after its proclamation by the first international congress of socialist parties in Europe on July 14th 1889 in Paris, France, to dedicate May 1st every year as the “Workers Day of International Unity and Solidarity. The date was chosen due to events on the other side of the Atlantic.

4) Movements in Lebanon

Many movements occur in Lebanon during the labor day that demands for many rights that the workers should have. Most of the movement are hosted by the Lebanese Communist Party that always struggle for the workers and their rights because many workers are paid little and has no insurance on there life.

5) Attitude of youth

In some schools in Lebanon, the students bring gifts for the workers in the school to celebrate the Labor day, and this has a positive effect on the youth in which they learn to respect the workers that work hard all the day in order to make their life easier.

6) Conclusion

Labor day is one of the most important holidays in Lebanon and in all the world, because the workers are the most important part in every society. Every worker in the world should have all his rights and should be paid well. In every family there are workers, and most of these workers suffer from not being paid well, so the workers should unite in labor day and protest in order to achieve their goals.
