

Mexican Immigration to United States

Prepared by Eminova Elfida, 405 group, IR.

What is migration?

- “Migration is the movement of people, involving a change of residence. It can be internal or external (international), and voluntary or forced. It is usually for an extended period (more than a year) and does not include temporary circulations such as commuting or tourism.” — The IB

Forced vs. Voluntary Migration

Forced

- Compelled to move by cultural factors.
 - War
 - Exile
 - Persecution
 - Slavery

Voluntary

- Choosing to move for economic improvement.
 - Jobs
 - Jobs
 - Jobs
 - Lifestyle

Causes of voluntary migration

- better living conditions
- access to health care
- access to good education
- Economic factors include:
 - better employment prospects
 - higher wages

- Mexicans are currently the single largest group of foreign-born residents in the country. In 2013, the United States counted 41.3 million individuals of foreign birth; 28 percent, or 11.6 million, were Mexican.

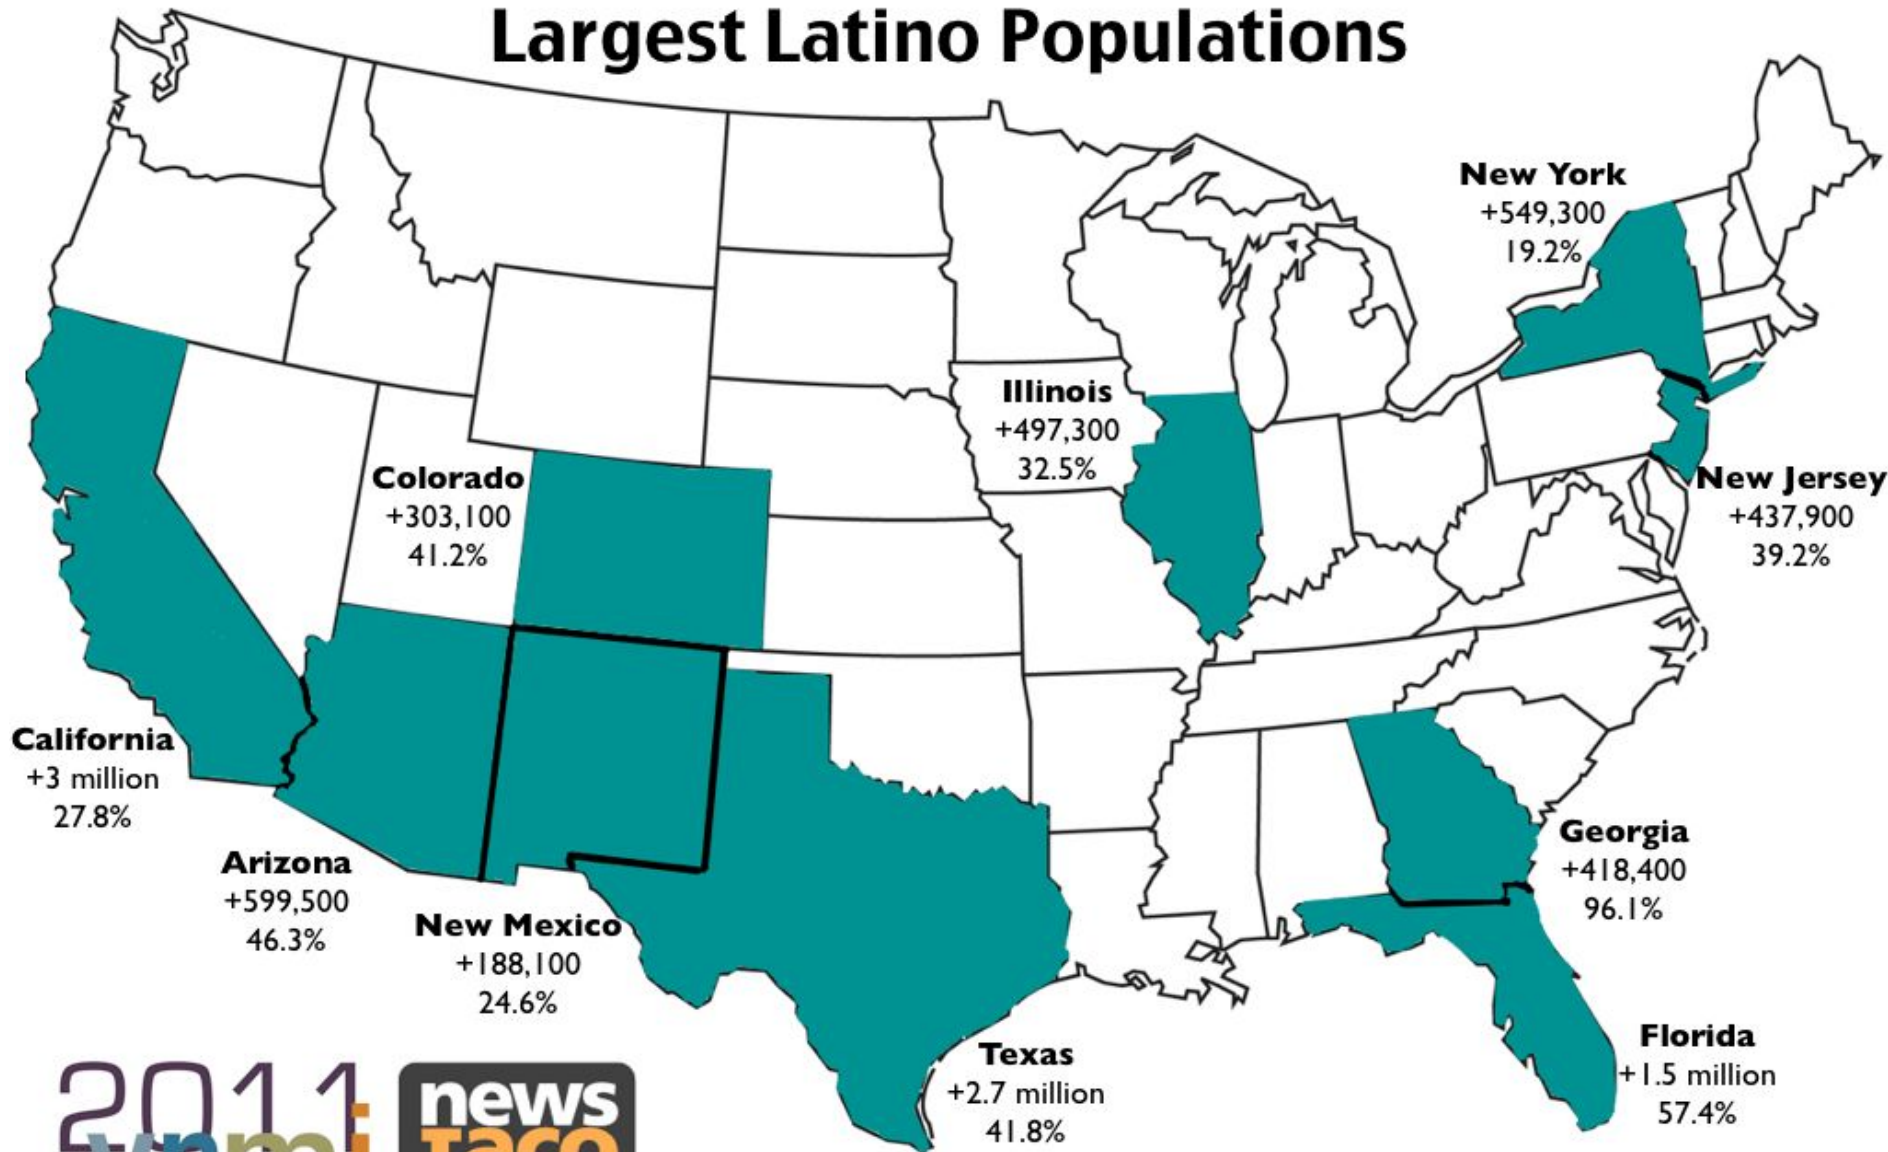

NO...WAIT...
COME BACK!

YOUR ECONOMY
STINKS, GRINGO!

PATH TO CITIZENSHIP

MEXICO
→

Top 10 States With The Largest Latino Populations

Mexican diaspora in the USA

The Mexican diaspora in the United States is comprised of approximately 37.7 million individuals who were either born in Mexico or reported Mexican ancestry or Hispanic origin, according to tabulations from the U.S. Census Bureau 2016 ACS.

Thank you for your attention..

