A SPIDER
A spider lives behind my door.
I see her when I sweep the floor.
Scurrying to her tiny lair
Strung across the corner there.
I suppose I wouldn't share
My house with crocodile or bear,
But one small spider is no chore—
I smile at her and close the door.

Baby Spider
Noiselessly the spider plunges
Like a diver off my door,
A tiny living dot that dangles
Seven feet above the floor.
Bungee-jumping astronaut,
Miniature member of his race,
Letting out his silver cord
He works defenselessly in space.
Disappearing, reappearing,
Lost in shadow, bathed in light,
He slowly inches undetected,
Patient in his daring flight.
The floor at last beneath his feet
He ends his risky episode
And sets out on a new adventure
Down the carpet's nappy road.
