Phoenix is the capital of Arizona. The population of the city of Phoenix is 1 million 513 thousand people which allows it to close the top five cities in the United States with the largest population. The agglomeration of the city of Phoenix in addition to the city itself includes the suburbs and settlements of the central part of Arizona. From 1990 to 2000, the population of the Phoenix metropolitan area grew by 45%, which is 3 times the average for the United States. This allowed the state of Arizona to become the second fastest growing state after Nevada. Significant growth, albeit at a slower pace, continues in the first decade of the 21st century.
