

Let's talk

Student A

You are a cello player in an orchestra. At the rehearsal your bow gets broken. You can not perform anymore. You ask for a new one.

Student B

You are a conductor. You are fed up with the cello player, because it's the third time this week that a bow has been broken. You suspect sabotage

Student A

You sing in a choir.

Suddenly you notice that the new chorister next to you is singing out of tune. You think that the newcomer got into the choir because of affair with the choir conductor.

Student B

You are a newcomer. You are singing out of tune because you have an awful hangover. You wouldn't have an affair with the conductor even for a fortune, because he/she is not your type.

Student A

You are afraid of performing in front of a lot of people. In 5 minutes the concert will start. You are having a panic attack

Student B

You have to go on a stage with that weirdo who's afraid. You are trying to explain that she/he's just a part of an orchestra and there is nothing to worry about

Student A

You are taking part in a musical talent show performing your favorite song. You get low points from one judge. You suspect that you chose a wrong song.

Student B

You are a judge at the contest. You give low points to the contestant because you were dumped during that song at the prom. Deny everything

Student A

You are at the interview and you are craving for the position of a teacher of music at school. You are hiding the fact that you were sacked from the previous job because of a crime you had committed.

Student B

You are an interviewer. You ask many questions to check whether it is a right candidate. Find out his/her experience and the reason of leaving the last job
