Hall of Benevolence & Rectitude
(Renshou Hall)

First built in Emperor Qianlong's reign (1757) and named the Hall of Indestructible Government when the Garden of Clear Ripples in the Emperor Qianlong's Summer Palace was completed. It had been believed to 'bring Prosperity' from the Chinese saying 'One who is benevolent enjoys longevity'. This was the Hall of Benevolence and Rectitude. This was where Emperor Guangxu handled court affairs as a young emperor during their stay in the Summer Palace. It is now a museum building.
