History

British television broadcasting began its work in 1936. Today it has about 500 channels, among which only 6 have the largest number of views. On average, the content of these channels brings in earnings of 2.6 billion euros annually. Digital television appeared in the UK in 1998. Since October 2012, all terrestrial, cable and Internet television in Britain has been broadcast in digital format.

The first TV broadcast

The British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) was established in 1922. Its first black-and-white TV broadcast took place in 1936 in the south of England. In 1940, broadcasting stopped for a while due to World War II, then resumed again in 1946.

Censorship

As such, there is no television censorship on British television, even political. However, adult content is allowed to be shown only after 21:00, and all swearing is hidden by the appropriate sound.
