

NETWORK COMPUTER TECHNICIAN

A computer network technician is a middle-level specialist who is engaged in the operation and maintenance of the operability of computer networks, complexes and systems based on hardware, software and communication components of information technology. Specialists in this field are forced to be jack of all trades. The main activities of a computer network technician: participation in the design of network infrastructure; organization of network administration; operation of network infrastructure facilities.

