Souvenir pins and debris are left behind from the 2004 Summer Olympic Games in Athens.

An American GI helmet and military-issue utensils remain from World War II Allied liberation efforts in the Mediterranean region in the 1940s.

Bullets embedded in architectural fragments are evidence of the Greek struggle for independence in the mid-1800s.

Gold-backed mosaics shine among the ruins of Constantinople after the city was pillaged by the Ottoman Turks in 1453.

Islamic pottery fragments lie amid debris from the sack of Sicily by Christian knights in the late 1000s.

DEEP TIME

THE DEEPER YOU GO THE OLDER THINGS ARE

This representation of a stratigraphy, or series of archaeological layers, shows some of the geological and historical events that occurred in the Mediterranean region. It illustrates the way objects are deposited in the earth over time.

MARCO ANSALONI

Enthroned Zeus

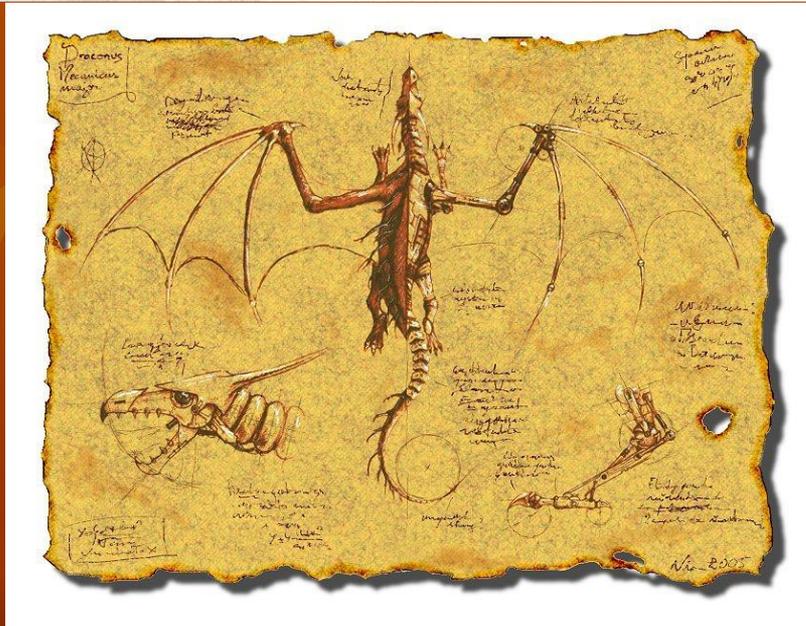

(c. 460-450 BC)
Marble

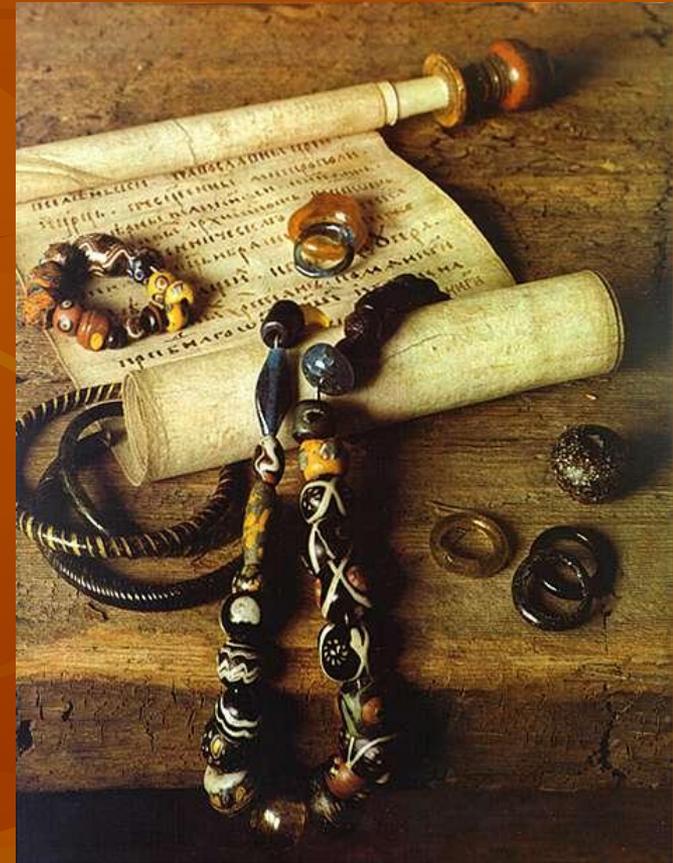

Zeus, king of the Olympian gods, was an ancient and a high-backed throne. He originally held a scepter in his right hand and a thunderbolt in his left. The enthroned, seated version indicates that the sculpture was designed in the six to a considerable time, the well-proportioned were head in hand, while the colossal form was exposed to burning sunlight.

Made after a natural form of Zeus created by the Greek sculptor Phidias in about 470 BC, this marble work may have served as a cult image in the great shrine of a wealthy Greek or Roman home. Phidias's Zeus was celebrated in ancient art and considered to be one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world. More than four feet high and made of porous ivory and gold, it dominated the interior of the god's temple at Olympia.
