

Youth cultures

Zimenko Maryna

The term “culture” can be defined as language, dress, beliefs, manners and tastes in food or music of a particular group. The concept of youth culture appeared in America in the 1950s and spread to Britain in the 1960s.

Mods

There was the development of music and fashion industries with the orientation to the youth market. New groups of young people dressed in Italian-style and leather clothes appeared. They were called Mods.

But there were young people who were against the materialistic wealth and stressed on spiritual values. They tried to show their protest in wearing unusual clothes, hair or in other ways. Thus in the 1960s and 1970s Hippies appeared.

Hippies

These young people usually had long hair and wore second-hand clothes. They liked to say, “Make love, not war”.

Hippies were against the Vietnam War and showed their peaceful feelings in their rock songs. Some of them are still popular – “Give Peace a Chance” and “All You Need is Love”.

Punks

In the mid 1970s punk rock appeared. Punks were not peace loving, but full of hate. Punks often had brightly coloured hair and wore clothes that could shock people.

Punk became a clothes design style and punk magazines “fanzines”, fan clubs, posters appeared.

Rappers

As a large number of teens today watch music videos, these influence their minds. Teens watch cool Rappers, who are looking and sounding unusual and they want a piece of that image. They wear the same clothes, sing violent lyrics and feel very cool.
