The most basic business structure is a sole proprietorship. The owner of the business is the sole individual who takes ownership of assets and debt obligations. Alternatively, multiple individuals with shared duties can operate a business, and this business structure is a partnership. A business may operate as a corporation. Incorporating a business releases owners of financial liability of business obligations; however, a corporation has unfavorable taxation rules for the owners of the business. For this reason, a fourth business structure, called a limited liability company, is available, which combines the benefits of a partnership and corporation.
