

Traditional Products

By: David Beckett

Slinky

Many of you have probably heard of or played with a Slinky. Well an American inventor named Richard T. James invented the slinky by accident when it basically walked down from shelf to multiple stacks of books then to the floor. Here is an image of a Slinky if you haven't seen one before.

Crayons

Another traditionally made American product is the crayon. It was created after two men named Edwin Benny and T. Harold Smith won a gold medal at the 1900 world fair.

Gibson

Gibson Guitars Co. is an American manufacturer of guitars and other instruments, now based in Nashville, Tennessee.

Louisville

Made in Kentucky since
1884, Louisville
Sluggers helped some
baseball legends
become baseball
legends.

Are they still popular?

Yes, they are Slinkys are not as popular but crayons are still really popular.

When are some of these products used?

I know that Louisville Sluggers are used
during spring, during
Major League Baseball
games, which are popular in America.

Are they facing problems?

No none really.

