

HORSE RACES

Horse racing is an equestrian sport, involving two or more jockeys riding horses over a set distance for competition.

Horse races vary widely in format. Often, countries have developed their own particular horse racing traditions.

Variations include:

- restricting races to particular breeds
- running over obstacles
- running over different distances
- running on different track surfaces
- running in different gaits.

It is one of the most ancient of all sports and its basic premise - to identify which of two or more horses is the fastest over a set course or distance - has remained unchanged since the earliest times.

A detailed tapestry or rug depicting a horse race. Several jockeys are shown riding horses, with one horse in the foreground appearing to lead. The scene is framed by a decorative border. The text is overlaid on the image.

Horse racing has a long and distinguished history and has been practiced in civilizations across the world since ancient times.

Archaeological records indicate that horse racing occurred in Ancient Greece, Babylon, Syria, and Egypt. It also plays an important part of myth and legend.

In later times, Thoroughbred racing was, and is, popular with the aristocrats and royalty of British society, earning it the title "Sport of Kings."

Many of the sport's greatest jockeys, most notably Sir Gordon Richards have been British.

At many horse races, there is a gambling station, where gamblers can stake money on a horse.

Dangers

A photograph of a horse race. In the foreground, a dark brown horse is galloping to the right. A jockey in a white and purple striped shirt is riding it. The horse has a green saddle cloth with the number '9' in yellow. In the background, another horse and jockey are visible. The jockey is wearing a green and yellow striped shirt and a white cap, and is lying on the grass, appearing to have fallen. The scene is set on a green grassy track with a white fence in the background.

There are many dangers in horse racing for both horse and jockey: a horse can stumble and fall, or fall when jumping an obstacle, exposing both jockey and horse to the danger of being trampled and injured.