

What is it like to live in the world of colors?

Colors
accompany
us
everywhere.
They are our invisible
companions.

History of color theory

The Greek philosopher Aristotle maintained that the two principal colors were white and black. All colors derived from one of the four elements: air, water, earth and fire.

But
now
there are millions of colors!

Color vision

Some species see no colors, some see a few colors, some see all colors, and some see colors that are not visible to the typical human eye.

What do you think about life without colors?

The most popular answer is that they can't imagine our life in black and white shades. It's impossible to live without colors.

The world of colors is boundless!

It's very interesting to live in it.

It's a real wonder that we can see colors.

Our life would be boring and monotonous without colors .

Colors have their own language.
