Harvard

- Harvard University is an American private Ivy League research university located in Cambridge, Massachusetts, United States, established in 1636 by the Massachusetts legislature.
- Harvard is the oldest institution of higher learning in the United States and the first corporation chartered in the country.
- Harvard's history, influence, and wealth have made it one of the most prestigious universities in the world.

Learning at Harvard

- Harvard contributes to society through two primary activities — teaching and research — in which the University's range and quality are superb.
- Harvard's faculty and academic facilities — laboratories, libraries, museums, and research centers — are unsurpassed by those of any institution.
- The depth and breadth of the curriculum are vast, extending well beyond course offerings to many other special programs and research opportunities.

Freshman Year

- Each student's plan of study is individualized, guided in the first year by a freshman adviser.
- There is no "freshman program"; students make their own decisions about the level and pace at which to start their undergraduate study.
- The faculty has determined that an undergraduate education requires the refinement of writing skills (through a single, one-semester course), a requirement all students address in their first year at Harvard.

Living at Harvard

- Harvard guarantees housing all four years.
- During their last three years, students live in a single House community, which ranges in size from 350 to 500 students.
- At the end of the first year students choose friends with whom to block in the Housing lottery, which guarantees their placement together in one of the twelve residential Houses.
- As in the Yard, rooming groups and bathrooms are single-sex and students generally live in suites of rooms.
- Each House has its own library, dining hall and common rooms, and also offers a wide range of formal and informal advising resources through its resident and non-resident tutors and faculty fellows.

Beyond the Classroom

- Extracurricular opportunities at Harvard are virtually limitless with more than 400 official student organizations including performing and visual arts groups, 41 varsity athletic teams, student government, public service organizations, more than 50 ethnic and cultural groups, publications, and media projects. In addition, students take advantage of living in Harvard Square, frequenting its movie theaters, bookstores, ice cream shops, cafes, and the many specialty shops.
- Athletics play a significant role in the lives of many Harvard students. There are 41 Division I intercollegiate varsity sports teams for women and men at Harvard, more than any other Division I college in the country. The Department of Athletics also offers more than 30 programs in a range of recreational and individual sports.
