Project management. What makes a good project team?

- A good project manager…
- For decisions to be reached in a project team…
- In terms of timing, a successful project…
- The biggest problems for a project team are…
- The jobs that you think are the most difficult and thankless and which ones that you think are the most enjoyable and rewarding. Give your reasons. Is the job of a project manger on the list? How do you rate it?

Plan

- Definitions
- What makes a good project team
- The most difficult and thankless jobs
- The most enjoyable and rewarding jobs
- Conclusion

Definitions

- Project – an important and carefully planned piece of work that will create sth new or improve a situation
- Project manager – a person or organization responsible for a particular piece of work that will create sth new or improve a situation
- Team – a group of people who work together to do a particular job

- Project management

- - the discipline of planning, organizing, securing and managing resources to achieve specific goals
- - a methodical approach to planning and guiding project processes from start to finish.

- A good project manager spends time developing a team spirit. He can`t be too easy going if they want to get things done
- For decisions to be reached in a project team majority rule is an efficient and fair system
- In terms of timing, a successful project may run over schedule if the need arises
- The biggest problem for a project team is the lack of clearly defined objectives for the project

A good project manager

- Knows how to organize and motivate people
- Has good communication skills
- Avoids acting like a boss
- Knows how to delegate work

- Is able to take a global view of the project
- Can deal with many tasks at the same time
- Ensures everyone is clear about the project aims

Conclusion

In modern conditions the project activity is a complex multi-level process. The successful management of projects is a science that has been practiced over the years by the best project managers.