

An honourable profession

The building professions

A Civil engineer.

- The person entering this honourable profession must have a scientific attitude, imagination, initiative and good judgement, obtained by experience and serious work.

- Builders construct and reconstruct residential and industrial building, bridges, school, palaces of culture, museums, theatres, kindergartens, hospitals and other different buildings.

An architects

An architects must receive a great deal of scientific training connected with his profession. He must know mathematics, as well as many facts concerning materials. Architects must need some knowledge of sculpture, painting, design, mechanical engineering, geography, city planning, ect.

- Civil engineers and architects have a common aim – to provide people with all modern conveniences, such as running water, gas, electricity, central heating.

The end