

A Career in law

FBI Agent. FBI agents use intelligence to protect the nation from threats and those who violate justice and the law.

FBI

almost 35,000 individuals are on its payroll, the FBI reports a critical need to hire new Special Agents and support personnel to carry out the FBI's mission.

Support personnel include intelligence analysts, language specialists, scientists, information technology specialists, and other professionals.

Police Officer
Police officers work in partnership with the public to reduce the level of crime and enforce federal, state and local laws.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, increased crime and a more security-conscious society are contributing to the rising demand for police services while generous salaries and benefits are attracting more people to the profession.

Individuals with college training and police and military experience, or both, have the best opportunities.

U.S. Marshal
U.S. Marshals are the nation's primary fugitive hunting organization and capture more federal fugitives each year than all other national law enforcement agencies combined, according to the United States Marshal Service.

Deputy U.S. Marshals are charged with some of the most unique and exciting duties known to law enforcement. As a nationwide agency, the Marshals Service seeks qualified men and women capable of carrying out a broad range of law enforcement and administrative responsibilities.

Forensic Scientist

Forensic scientists use cutting-edge scientific techniques to preserve and examine evidence and develop investigative leads in connection with civil and criminal proceedings.

Forensic analysts often specialize in areas such as DNA analysis or firearm examination.

As developments in technology increase the role of forensic science in the court, the demand for forensic scientists will continue to grow.

