

A large crowd of people is gathered indoors, many holding up American flags and cheering. The scene is filled with excitement and patriotic sentiment. The text "Elections in the United States." is overlaid in a blue, cursive font on a semi-transparent white background.

Elections in the United States.

Shibanova

-
- According to the U.S. Constitution, "no person except a citizen by birth" can not be elected as president
 - Can not be elected to this office any person under the age of 35 years and have not lived in for 14 years in the United States.
 - U.S. presidential candidates from Democratic and Republican parties nominated in primary elections (primaries) or caucus (the convention) parties.

Caucus - a meeting of party functionaries who carried out consistently across the vertical hierarchy of the party state: grass-roots organizations (parishes and townships) - mid-level party committees (districts, counties, constituencies for elections to Congress) - the party convention of the state. At each of these stages party members vote for those delegates who will represent them and speak on their behalf at the next level of party organization of the state.

There are two forms of the caucuses - closed and open. In the first part can only registered members of the respective parties. Secondly - all voters, regardless of their party affiliation.

The background of the entire slide is a close-up, slightly blurred image of the American flag, showing the stars and stripes in a dynamic, waving pattern.

There are several types of primaries:

- In closed primaries (closed primaries) are taking part in the vote those voters who have declared their affiliation to the respective party and registered as such.
- In open primaries (open primaries) is open to all voters of the State, regardless of party affiliation. Operates only one limitation - the voter, as a rule, can take part in the primaries, only one political party.
- In the primaries, the general (blanket primaries) voters can vote, which is held by both parties.

State law does not regulate the procedure for nominating caucuses. Another matter - the primaries, the organization which, in contrast to the party meetings, take on the state governments. Primaries are held at such times that the states establish their own.

The background of the slide is a collage. It features several US coins, including quarters and pennies, scattered across the top and sides. In the center, there is a US dollar bill, partially obscured by a semi-transparent blue box containing text. The bottom of the image shows a faint, stylized representation of the US Capitol dome. The text is written in a bold, dark blue font within the central box.

After completing a series of primaries held party conventions (conventions), which is officially proclaimed the party's support of a candidate. Candidates registered as secretaries of state candidates from the relevant parties. In addition, the laws of all states allow registered independents. In this set of restrictions. In particular, a person may lose, can not be allowed to participate in the elections as independent candidates. Is not allowed to nominate one candidate for more than one elective office.

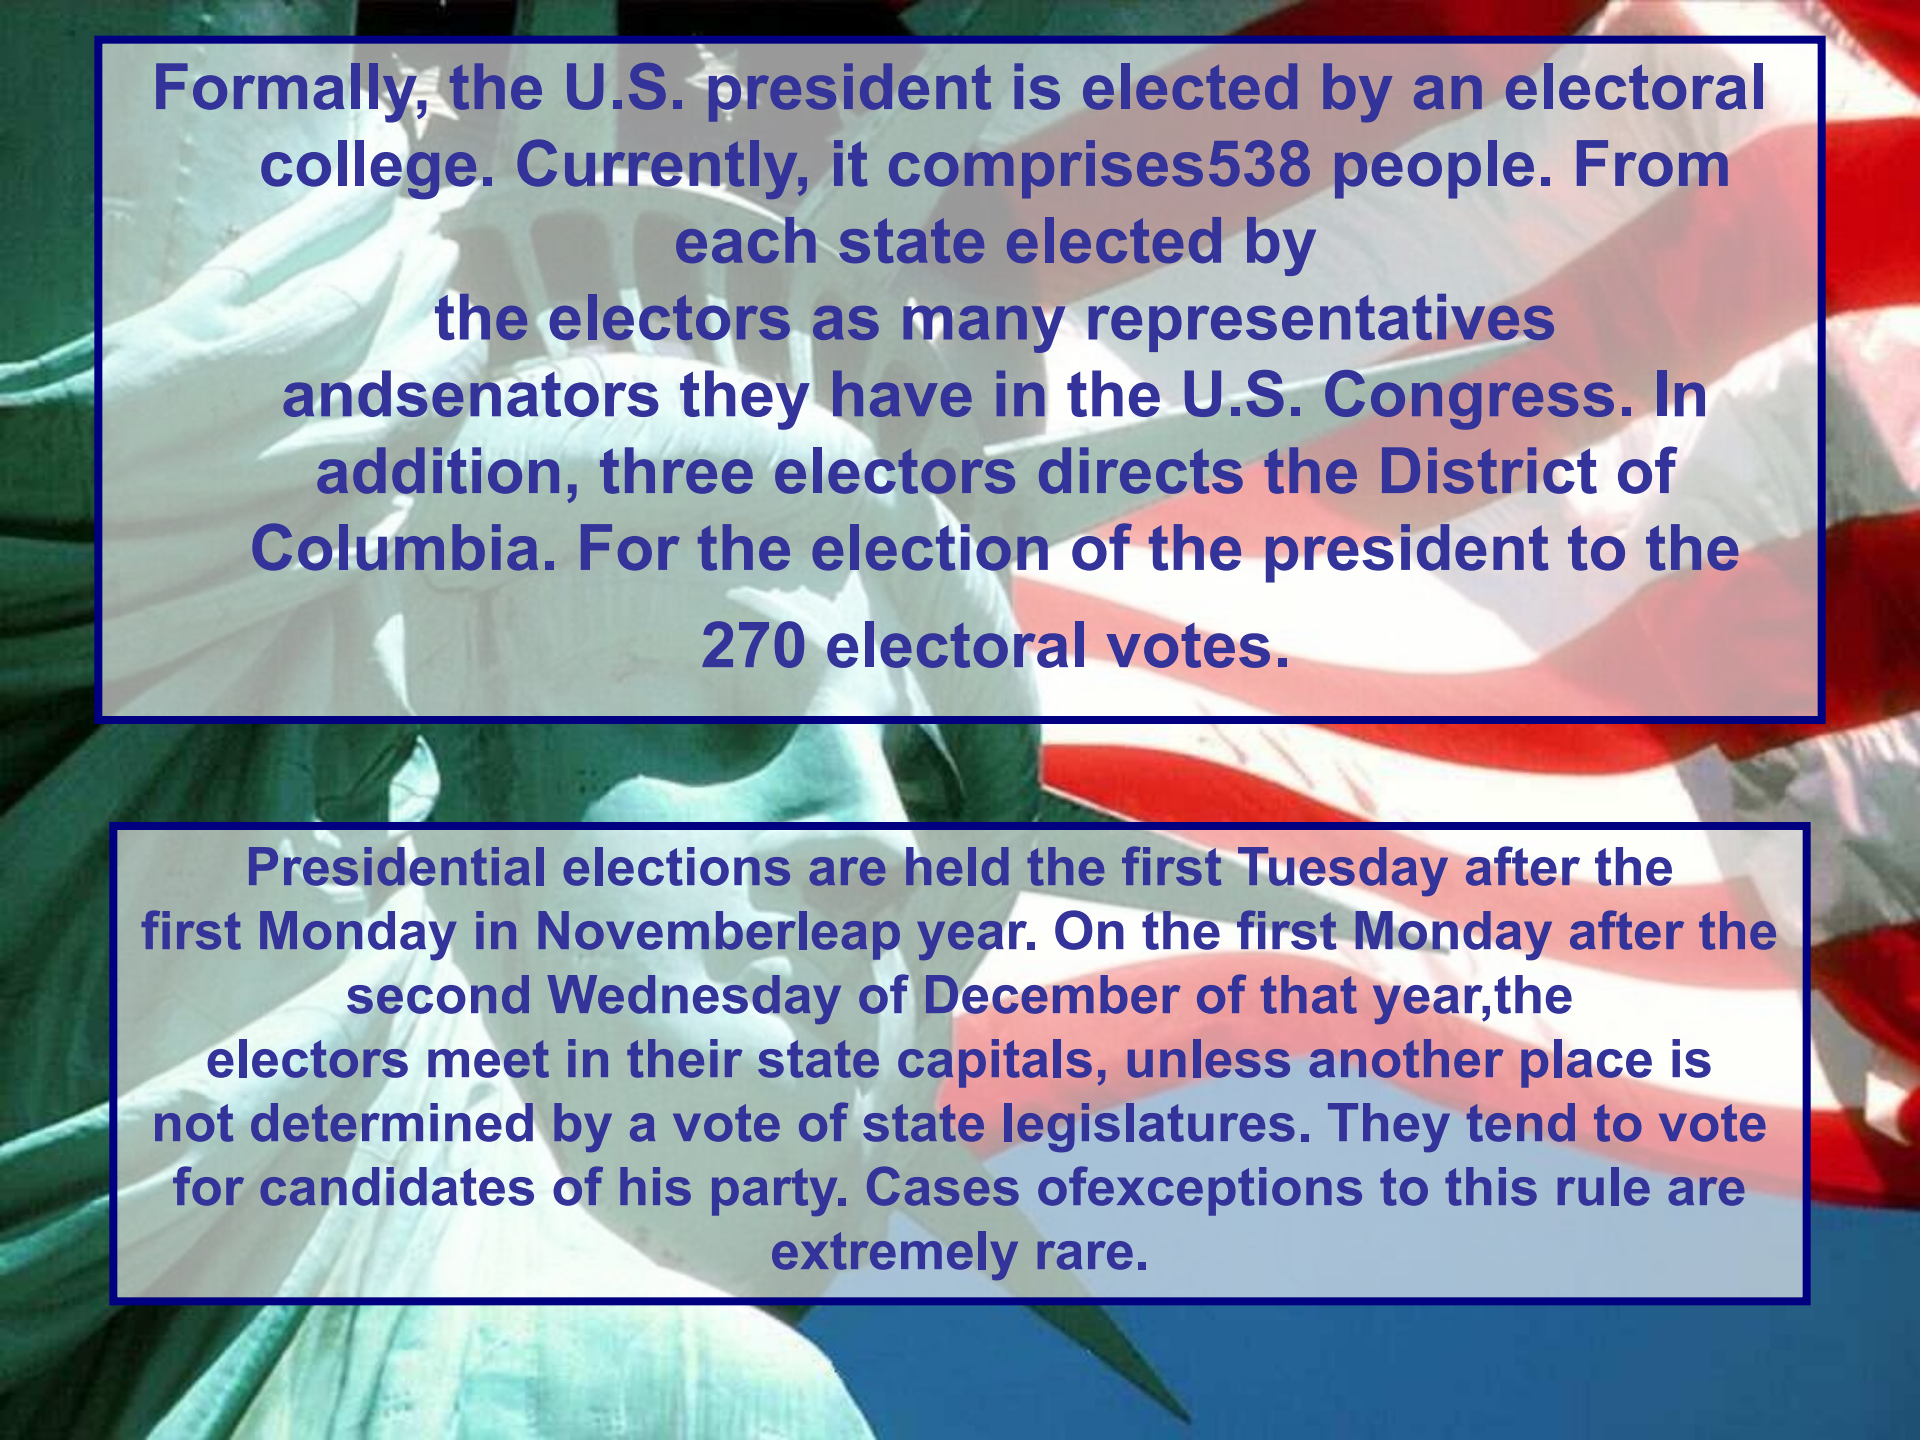

Candidates for president must establish the authorized political committee of the main(authorized committee) within 15 days from the day they became candidates(candidates are persons who claim to stand for election to that end, who collectedcontributions amounting to more than 5000 dollars or more spent 5000 dollars)

Law on the Federal Election

Campaign tightly regulates the overall maximum amount of expenses that may be made by candidates for president. In that case, if they receive funds to conduct the election campaigns of the U.S. Treasury, they can be spent:

- Not more than $ 10 million to win the nomination as a presidential candidate, while in each state, they can spend no more than 16 cents per voter in the State;
- Not more than $ 20 million in order to achieve the election of the president.

The background of the slide features a close-up of the Statue of George Washington, showing his face and the top of his head. To the right, the red and white stripes of the American flag are visible, flowing diagonally across the frame.

Formally, the U.S. president is elected by an electoral college. Currently, it comprises 538 people. From each state elected by the electors as many representatives and senators they have in the U.S. Congress. In addition, three electors direct the District of Columbia. For the election of the president to the 270 electoral votes.

Presidential elections are held the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November leap year. On the first Monday after the second Wednesday of December of that year, the electors meet in their state capitals, unless another place is not determined by a vote of state legislatures. They tend to vote for candidates of his party. Cases of exceptions to this rule are extremely rare.

Federal law establishes the following procedure for the official tabulation of the results of presidential elections:

- The Congress shall assemble at its meeting on the sixth day of January following the meetings of the electoral college.
- The Senate and House of Representatives gather in the Conference Room of the House of Representatives in the hour of the day. Preside at that meeting takes on the chairman of the Senate.
- By that time, shall be appointed two members of the Counting Commission (tellers) from the Senate and two members of the Counting Commission of the House of Representatives. They should be transferred after the chairman of the Senate will open the envelopes, all evidence of the voting or other documents, replacing the certificate of the electors voting

-
- These testimonies and documents must be printed, announced and presented to the counting of votes, in alphabetical order, starting with the letter "A". Tellers are counting on the list as they appear in the disclosure of evidence of the vote.
 - After the votes are recorded and counted, the vote represented the chairman of the Senate, which they announce
 - If the election of the president and vice president of the United States took place, the records of this protocol logs are recorded in both houses of Congress.

In the event that candidates do not gain the majority (270) of electoral votes, applies an extraordinary procedure for electing the president, provided XII Amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

According to the XII Amendment to the Constitution, the President elect U.S. House of Representatives from among three candidates with the most votes. Voting is conducted separately for groups of deputies from each of the states. In addition, each parliamentary group has only one vote regardless of its size. Voting is allowed only on condition that it involves at least two-thirds of the parliamentary groups of states. To be elected, a candidate must receive the votes of more than half of the parliamentary groups of states.

The last stage of the presidential election - the inauguration. The newly elected president takes office at noon on January 20 next year after the election (Amendment XX to the Constitution).

A photograph of Barack Obama, then President of the United States, standing at a wooden podium. He is wearing a dark suit, a white shirt, and a red patterned tie. He is waving his right hand towards the camera. In the background, there is a large American flag. The text "Thank you for your attention!!" is overlaid on the image in a white, cursive font.

Thank you for your attention!!