BACKGROUND:

The Gurukul system of education was practiced in ancient India where the students lived with the teacher

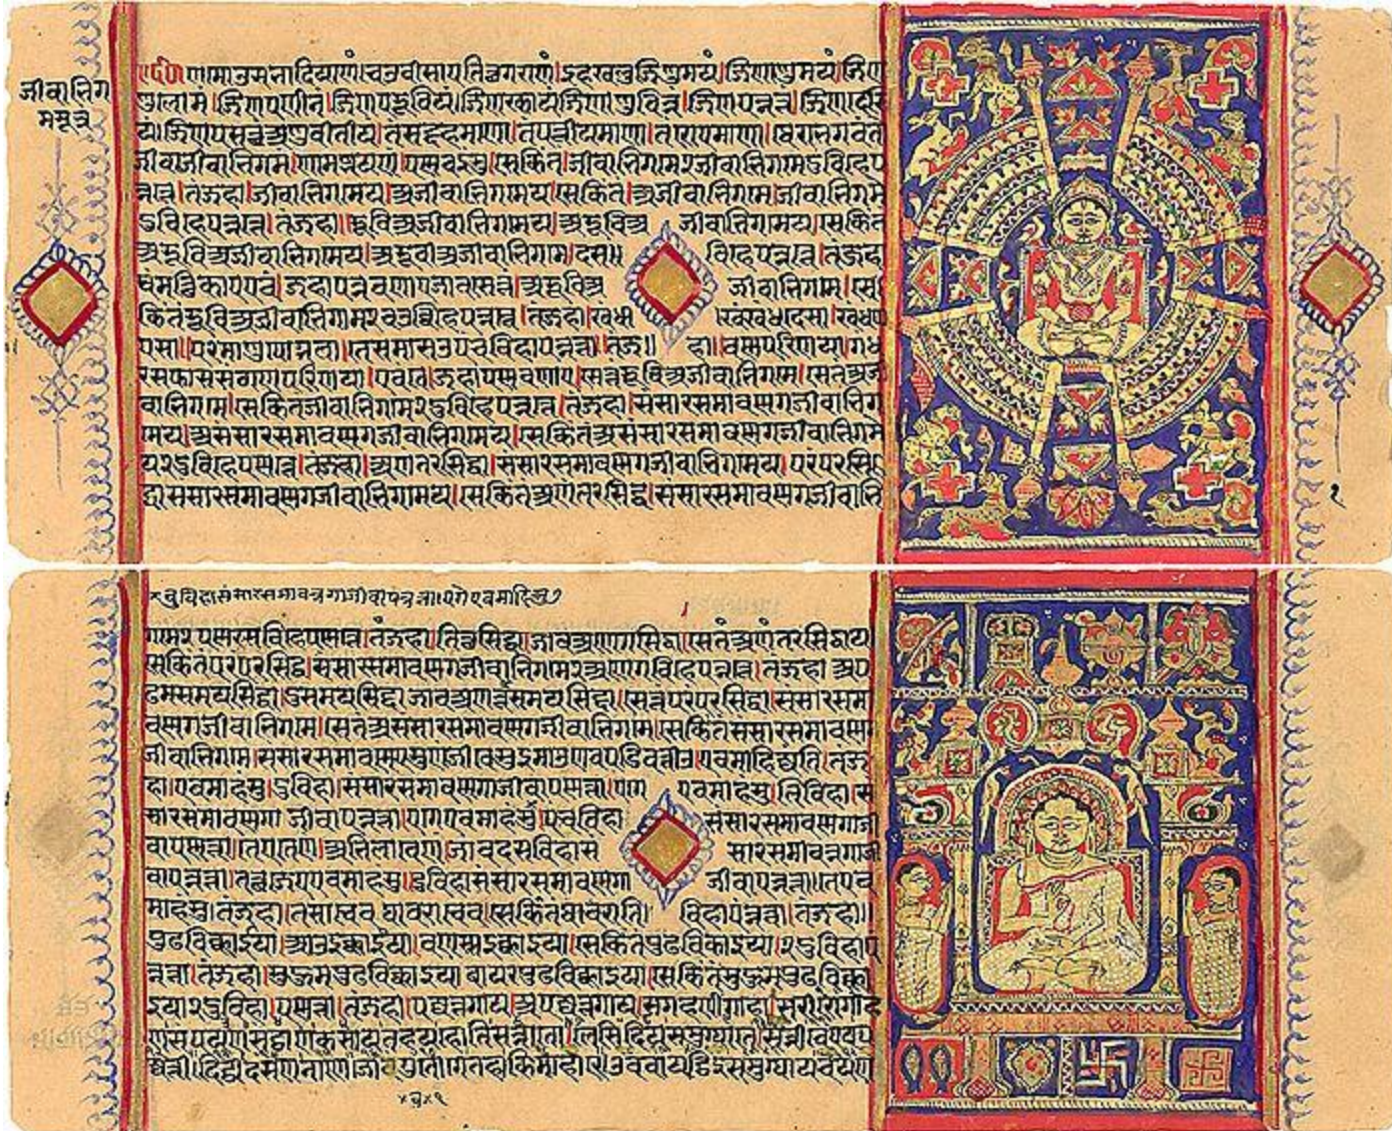

The purpose of education was to attain spiritual enlightenment (moksha)

With the passage of time, education was based on caste system (based to duties performed). The brahmins learnt about scriptures and religion, the kshatriyas learnt about the art of warfare. The vaishyas learnt commerce and other vocational courses whereas the shudras (lowest caste) were deprived of education.

MS in Jain prakrit on paper, Western India, ca. 1500, 105 ff. (complete), 13x31 cm, single column, (10x26 cm), 15 lines in Devanagari book script, 2 miniatures in gold, red and lapiz lazuli . The Suryaprajnaptisutra, an astronomical work dating to the 3rd or 4th c. BC, constitutes one of the classics of the Jain Svetambara sect and gives information on the sun, moon and planets and their motions

COLONIAL RULE:

English education flourished with the establishment of missionary schools in 1820 by the British

Thomas Maculay believed that education must be in English and introduced English education in 1835. He created a class of anglicised Indians who would serve as a cultural link between the British and the Indians.

Persian was replaced by English as the official language of India

Education helped integrate the diverse elements of the Indian society.

India's New 'English Only' Generation

Sudhir Nagaraj and his wife, Bidisha, live in the mini-India that is Bangalore. She, a Bengali speaker from a family hailing from India's east, heads marketing for a social networking start-up. He, fluent in the native Kannada tongue of Bangalore, runs a subsidiary of a multinational telecommunications company. Between them, they speak and understand half a dozen Indian languages.

Quite ironic then that their daughter, Ahana, six-and-a-half, growing up in a country with a profusion of tongues, speaks only one language: impeccable English. And English is the common tongue that binds the Nagarajs as a family.

In Bangalore and elsewhere in Big City India, factors like great mobility, a demanding school system and mixed marriages are churning up a startling consequence: a generation of urban children is growing up largely monolingual — speaking, thinking and dreaming only in English.

This is a country with 20 official languages including English, some three dozen languages spoken by over a million native speakers each, and a few hundred “live” languages.

What's more, English speakers in India outnumber those in all of western Europe, not counting the United Kingdom. And Indian English-speakers are more than twice the UK's population. These facts emerge from recently released census 2001 data on bilingualism and trilingualism in India. Indians' linguistic prowess stood revealed with as many as 255 million speaking at least two languages and 87.5 million speaking three or more. In other words, about a quarter of the population speaks more than one language.

English or Hinglish – which will India choose?

Today's aspirational Indians want their children to go to a school where lessons are taught in English. But often the pupils leave speaking a language that would not be recognised in London or New York. Could this Hinglish be the language of India's future?

Why, half a century after Indian independence, does English remain the language of higher education, national media, the upper judiciary and bureaucracy and corporate business?

The answer is that India, unlike its rival Asian giant China, has no truly national language of its own. Hindi, the official language of central government, is an artificial and largely unspoken 20th Century construct.

Even the colloquial Hindustani of Bollywood films is spoken by only 40% of the population, concentrated in the "cow belt" of northern India.

The rest of the subcontinent speaks hundreds of regional vernaculars.
