Ohthere's voyage
Selections p. 12

þæt he sæde on þæm lande norþweardum wip þa Westsæ. He sæde þeah þæt þæt land sie swipe lang norþ þonan; He said, however, that the land is [i.e. extends] very long to the north from there. Ac

Ohtere sæde his hlaforde, Ælfrede cyninge, þæt he ealra Norðmonna norþmest bude. He cwæp þæt he bude on þæm lande norþweardum wip þa Westsæ. He sæde þeah þæt þæt land sie swipe lang norþ þonan; He said, however, that the land is [i.e. extends] very long to the north from there. Ac hit is eal weste, buton on feawum stowum styccemælum wiciap Finnas, on huntōpe on wintra, and on sumera on fiscepe be þære sæ.

Ohthere saede his hlaforde – Ohthere (Ottar) said to his lord (“lord” is here used to convey respect to his host, Ohthere – a Nordic tradesman – was not King Alfred’s subject)

Disguised compounds – words that were originally compounds but due to shortening are not transparently compounds any more

Hlaford < hlaf + weard (loaf – guardian: bread-keeper) – LORD, (cf hlaefdige < hlaf + dig- to knead (as in DOUGH) – LADY)

Other examples:

god-spela (good news)– GOSPEL, shire's reeve (= county's head) – SHERIFF, and many more)

Later in the text: buton < be + utan (BE OUT) –

BUT (all words in bold print are disguised compounds – notice that some were disguised compounds in Old English and have been shortened even further)

Old English had 4 cases (just like Present-Day German):

Nominative (basic meaning – what? who?)

Genitive (basic meaning – of what? whose?)

Dative (basic meaning – to what? to whom?)

Accusative (basic meaning – what? who? as objects)

Ohthere saede his (Genitive Singular) hlaforde (Dative Singular), Aelfrede cyninge (both Dative Singular) – Ohthere said to his lord, to Alfred the King cyning – KING (cf Estonian “kuningas” – has retained the Proto-Germanic ending – az)

Cf German König

Bude (praeterite from) buan - 1) to dwell, to cultivate land), 2) to stay, visit (cf BOER, German Bauer, Gebaude)

The two meanings yield two interpretations of where Ohthere actually lived and what places he visited. (Lennart Meri “Hõbevalge” – Ottar visited what is present-day Estonia)

that he ealra Northmonna northmest bude – that he of all Northmen (=Danes, Vikings) northernmost lived (or stayed,
visited)

He cwaeth thaet he bude on thaem lande northweardum with tha Westsae – he said that he was (or lived) on that land northwards against that (the) West Sea (probably the North Atlantic off the Norwegian coast).

cwaeth - praeterite from cwethan – to say, to speak; QUOTH as in “quoth he”, “quoth the Raven: Nevermore” (“Ütles ronk: ei iialgi”, Edgar Allan Poe), notice that the word order is always reversed in Modern English! Also BEQUEATH (pärandama) < be-cwethan.

with - against (see Beowulf)

tha, thaet, thaere – see next slide (pick the correct forms on your own!)

Declension of the demonstrative pronoun that (for those interested, Introduction p. 53 - not obligatory!):

Singular

Masculine Feminine Neuter

N se seo thaet

G thaes thaere thaes

D thaem thaere thaem

A thone tha thaem

Plural (all genders)

N tha

G thara, thaera

D thaem, tham

A tha

The demonstrative pronoun was often used in the function of an article but was not grammaticalised (i.e., not obligatory and subject to rules). In that respect, Old English was much like Estonian (“Pane raamat lauale”, “Pane see raamat lauale”, but hardly ever “Pane see raamat sellele lauale”, as against Modern English “Put the book on the table” – here the article is grammaticalised, i.e. compulsory in both positions – the same was true already of Middle English)

theah – though, THOUGH

thaet – conjunction

thaet - demonstrative pronoun

sie - Subjunctive from beon/wesan (to be), used to denote reported speech, the so-called quotative function (as in present-Day German sei – olevat; in many cases the Estonian olevat implies far more doubt than the German sei, though there are cases where the Estonian olevat also has a mere quotative function).

swithe – very much thonan – thence, from there (THENCE is still used in Modern English, just like whence, hence, hither, thither, etc).

He saede theah thaet thaet land sie swithe lang north thonan – he said though that that land is (i.e. extends) very long north from there

Ac - but (has not survived except as a loan in Estonian: aga) hit is eal weste – it is all empty (WASTE as in T.S. Eliot’s “Wasteland”).

buton – except for, BUT, see above,
disguised compounds

stow – place (place is a French loan); TO STOW, a STOWAWAY (“jänes”, a person riding without paying, originally on a ship, a person hiding/stowed in the hold of a ship)

stycce - piece (cf German Stück – piece, Estonian tükk) styccemaelum (adjective/adverb, originally from the Dative plural of the respective adjective) – piecemeal; here and there (NB! Notice how one part of a Germanic word – stycce – has been replaced by a French loan (pièce), the other part has remained Germanic. This word also shows the path from the Dative Plural ending –um to the adverbial ending –om, as in seldom, whilom).

on feawum stowum styccemaelum – in a few places here and there (on in the meaning of where? takes the Dative, in the meaning of to where? whither? takes an Accusative, as in on stefn stigon in “Beowulf”; this is exactly the rule in Present-Day German) wiciath – Present Plural from wician (a weak verb, i.e. the predecessor of Modern English regular verbs) – to dwell (wic – dwelling place, village, cf Modern English –WICH, -WICK in placenames).

An early loan from Latin (vicus – village).

Finnas - might have been predecessors of present-day Lapps (Samis); might have been Estonians?

On feawum stowum styccemaelum wiciath Finnas - in a few places here and there live/dwell Lapps/(Estonians?)

On hunttothe on wintra and on sumera on fiscathe – (living) on hunting in winters
and in summers on fishing

be thaere sae – by that see (thaere – Dative singular of the feminine form of thaet, see the Table above).

A rough translation to help you (remember that for a real translation, you'll have to go through the slide-show!)

Othere said to his lord, King Alfred, that he lived (or: stayed, visited) northernmost (NB! Notice that the present-day form is “northernmost”) of all the Northmen (Present-Day Norwegians/Vikings/speakers of Old Norse, who most probably lived in present-day Norway). He said, however, that the land is [i.e. extends] very long to the north from there. But it is all waste, except that Sámi (or perhaps Estonians? Depends on whether he lived in or visited the place) people camp out in a few places here and there—by hunting in winter and fishing in summer along the sea.
