Daylight Saving Time explained in 90 seconds

- Every year at 1am on the last Sunday in March, the clocks go forward.
- The reverse happens at 2am on the last Sunday in October, when the clocks go back an hour.
- This is known as Daylight Saving Time, but is also referred to as British Summer Time.
- Parliament passed the Daylight Saving Bill on 17 May 1916, during WWI.
- The whole point is to maximize exposure to daylight at different points in the year.
- It particularly allows for longer, lighter evenings in the summer.
- And in winter, it gives you an extra hour in bed at night when the clocks change back.
- The common argument is that it improves economic output, saves energy and reduces road traffic accidents and crime.
- Critics argue that daylight saving is bad for our health, reduces productivity and increases energy consumption.
- In a recent survey, 40% of Brits would like to scrap daylight saving, while 33% are in favour of keeping it.
