- Pink Floyd were an English rock band that achieved international acclaim with their progressive and psychedelic music. Distinguished by their use of philosophical lyrics, sonic experimentation, and elaborate live shows, they are one of the most commercially successful and musically influential groups in the history of popular music.

- The image features a large, semi-transparent prism in the center, which is the iconic logo of the band Pink Floyd. A vibrant rainbow spectrum of light is shown emerging from the right side of the prism, extending across the right half of the frame. The background is solid black, which makes the white text and the colorful light stand out prominently.

- Founded in 1965, Pink Floyd originally consisted of students Syd Barrett, Nick Mason, Roger Waters, and Richard Wright. They first gained popularity performing in London's underground music scene during the late 1960s, and under Barrett's creative leadership they released two charting singles and a successful debut album. David Gilmour joined as a fifth member in December 1967, and Barrett left the band in April 1968 due to his deteriorating mental health.

Show Pink Floyd

- Pink Floyd known, among other things, for its incredible views combining visual effects and music, creating a show, where the band themselves practically sidelined. In the early period of Pink Floyd were the first group using the special equipment for the light show in their presentations, slides and videos projected on a large round screen. Later used lasers, fireworks, balloons and figures.
