TV in Britain

- The British like watching game shows with the hosts, who are usually comedians, and with contestants, who try to win prizes, such as holiday, money televisions, cars and so on. In Russian television the adverts can compose more than 30 % of a film time or a chat show, but in Britain it contains about 10 %. I think that soap operas in Britain are more reality than in Russia.

The BBC gets its funds from license fee which all owners of the televisions must pay. There are no commercials on BBC programmes. The IBA channels are funded by television educational (commercials).
