One Queen, two birthdays

The Queen celebrates her actual birthday on 21 April. She also celebrates her official birthday on either the first or the second, and sometimes the third, Saturday in June.

King Edward VII, who was born on 9 November, was the first Sovereign to mark his official birthday on a separate day to his actual birthday throughout his reign, holding celebrations in either May or June.

Trooping the Colour

Thousands of spectators watch as the Queen marks her official birthday with Trooping the Colour.

Afterwards the Royal Family gathers on the balcony of Buckingham Palace to watch a Red Arrows fly-past.

In 2006 the Queen celebrated her 80th birthday

The Queen's Role

Head of State

As Head of State, the Queen goes on official State visits abroad. She also invites other world leaders to come to the United Kingdom. During their visit, Heads of State usually stay at Buckingham Palace or sometimes at Windsor Castle or Holyroodhouse in Edinburgh.

Head of the Armed Forces

The Queen is also the Head of the Armed Forces. She is the only person who can declare when the country is at war and when war is over.

Head of the Church of England

The Queen is Head of the Church of England - a position that all British monarchs have held since it was founded by Henry VIII in the 1530s. The Queen appoints archbishops and bishops on the advice of the Prime Minister. The spiritual leader of the Church of England is the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Represents the Nation

The Queen represents the nation at times of great celebration or sorrow.

Being the Queen is a really busy job. Elizabeth II gets up early and begins her day by looking through the newspapers. The Queen has daily meetings with her Private Secretary who helps her to go through her paperwork, and lots of meetings with ambassadors, new judges, and bishops.

She opens hospitals, bridges and factories. Once a week, the Queen has a meeting with the Prime Minister and they discuss government business. Elizabeth II has to work from early morning until late at night and people watch her all the time.
