I've been using Twitter a lot lately and posting some really interesting links. I am also an avid user of Stumble Upon and combining it with Twitter and sharing stuff is the greatest thing that I can indulge myself in. I have unraveled some really great articles in the past couple of weeks and I would love to share them with you today.

I have handpicked the best 10 articles from my twitter feed and have showcased them here. Some are purely professional, a few are funny but useful and the rest are just a pleasure to read. I suggest you take a look at these and read it to gain some wisdom on design and creativity. It has had a positive effect on the way I look at things now. My thoughts and ideas have become more dynamic and mature.

There are so many great articles on the web today and most of them are left undiscovered by the bigger part of the Design community. This maybe due to the increasing number of list posts,

8 SEO Pointers for Ecommerce Product Pages

Search engine optimization can be the difference between ecommerce businesses that thrive, and those that don't. Optimizing product pages for search engines is especially important.

Below are eight pointers to make sure your product pages are properly optimized.

1. Place Keywords in Title Tags

One of the most important elements is the title tag of your page. If you type a keyword in Google, you'll notice that most results will have the keyword in the title tag. Make sure the keyword is as prominent as possible in the title.

To have the best title tag possible, make sure that you do your keyword research for the products that you want to rank best for. Google's free AdWords Keyword Tool can help with this research.

2. Use Description in the Meta Tag

Кажется, что так будет лучше

На основе:

- Опыта
- Ощущений
- Прогнозов

Рекомендации специалистов

Результат

- Показатели стали ниже
- Показатели увеличились, но меньше, чем могли бы
- Изменили не то, что нужно
- Эффект изменений неизвестен
- Показатели стали ощутимо больше
