HELLO Dolly

A WebQuest

Introduction

If you read the newspaper or listen to television news, you have heard a lot about cloning. Do you know exactly what a clone is? Do you know about the debate concerning cloning? A sheep named Dolly was the very first clone of an adult mammal. Dolly was news because for the first time a clone was created from differentiated cells - that is, cells that were not embryonic. Since Dolly, researchers the world over have been creating clones of other mammals, including mice and cows. Because human beings are also mammals, scientists have begun to discuss the ethical, moral, legal, and biological issues that might result from the cloning of human beings. Under what circumstances should cloning be allowed? Is it acceptable to clone bacteria or mice? Is it acceptable to clone your favorite pet animal? Should cloning of human organs be allowed? Should cloning of human beings be allowed? What kinds of restrictions should be placed on cloning technologies?

Task
Your job today is to form an opinion as to whether human cloning is acceptable. Today you will learn what cloning is and how clones are made through this webquest expedition. You will research the ethical arguments both for, and against, human cloning.
Once you have done your research, you will form an opinion as to whether human cloning should be allowed. You will present this opinion in the form of a voting ballot.
Go on by clicking on the top navigation bar entitled, "Process."

Google Search
Can't find something in the SDSU WebQuest database? You can search more broadly by going to Google. Type a word or phrase that describes a topic that you'd like to find a WebQuest about and see what you get. Be aware, though, that the quality of what you find will vary widely, and that many (if not most) pages that call themselves "WebQuests" are really something else.
