The article is from 'IET Commun.' Volume 5, Issue 4, dated 4 March 2011. The abstract is visible, discussing the wide diffusion of network address translators (NATs) and the distributed connectivity service (DISCOS) architecture. On the right side of the article, there is a 'Buy This PDF' button for $30 and a list of social media links including Connotea, citeulike, del.icio.us, and BibSonomy. The wide diffusion of network address translators (NATs) (and, in some respect, firewalls) may prevent some applications that require direct end-to-end connectivity (e.g. real-time media) from being able to connect to the remote party. Although the solutions currently adopted rely on centralised nodes as third party relays, the distributed connectivity service (DISCOS) architecture has been recently proposed and aims at distributing such functionalities across a peer-to-peer (P2P) overlay. The original study presented some performance characteristics of the overlay, but the ability to resist to both failures and attacks was not taken into consideration. This study illustrates the robustness feature of the DISCOS overlay and suggests some minor

Welcome!

Created with DASH! This site is one of a series of searchable information centers that ebrary employees are creating on topics that are important to us. We understand that while there is a wealth of information on these topics available on the Internet, it is often difficult to find and search the data you need, especially across multiple sources.

To build this site, we gathered public domain PDF documents from government websites, and converted some information from web pages, Word documents, and other file types into PDF by "printing to PDF." We then uploaded them into the ebrary system, which converts PDF documents into highly interactive, searchable databases, using our new DASH! feature and other ebrary services.

We are proud to put our technology to use in a way that can benefit people worldwide, and we hope that you find it a valuable resource.

We welcome any comments or suggestions by emailing dp@ebrary.com.

Why Do Earthquakes Occur in the Bay Area?

The San Francisco Bay Area has had and will continue to have earthquakes because it has at least eight earthquake faults (black lines on map) that can cause serious damage.

- Large damaging earthquakes happened here in 1868, 1906, and 1989; smaller damaging earthquakes occur more often.
- Scientific research shows that, more likely than not, a big quake will happen here in the next 30 years.
- Strong ground shaking will cause most of the damage. The map shows that most of the Bay Area will experience strong shaking.
- Areas of soft soil, mainly near the bay, shake harder than areas of hard rock.
- Unlike some earthquakes that occur beneath the ocean, Bay Area earthquakes are not expected to cause significant tsunamis. However, distant

Open Access – Ebrary

The screenshot shows the Ebrary Cyber Bullying Searchable Information Center website. The browser window has a Windows XP taskbar at the top. The website header includes the Ebrary logo and the title "Cyber Bullying Searchable Information Center". Navigation tabs include "Info", "Search", "QuickView", and "Bookshelf". A search bar contains the text "earthquake OR earthquakes". The main content area is divided into three columns:

- Welcome to ebrary's Searchable Information Center on Cyber Bullying!

According to the National Crime Prevention Council, 43% of teens have been the victims of cyber bullying in the past year.

To help parents, educators, and others better understand, prevent, and take action against this growing concern, ebrary is subsidizing a collection of e-books on cyber bullying. Additionally, ebrary employees have uploaded a number of government documents from the Pew Internet & American Life Project, U.S. Department of Justice, and other organizations with DASH! (Data Sharing, Fast) – a do-it-yourself e-publishing feature of many ebrary products.

We encourage organizations to contribute additional materials as long as they have copyrights. If you are interested in contributing, please email tish.wagner@ebrary.com for a complimentary DASH! account.

No one can keep up with the literature, so having colleagues point out the recent important advances in unfamiliar areas is enormously useful.
