BIOGRAPHY

Maureen Orth is an American journalist, author, and a Special Correspondent for Vanity Fair magazine. Orth published Vulgar Favors: Andrew Cunanan, Gianni Versace, and the Largest failed Manhunt in U.S. History. She dedicated the book to her late husband, Tim Russert, and their son Luke, as well as Orth's mother. In the book, Orth claimed, among other things, that Gianni Versace had AIDS and that his deteriorating health was kept a secret to avoid putting a public listing of his company at risk.

In October 2016, reports began circulating that FX would be developing a television miniseries based on Orth's book as part of the American Crime Story franchise. In January 2018, FX debuted a nine-episode miniseries, "American Crime Story: The Assassination of Gianni Versace" starring Darren Criss, Édgar Ramírez, Penélope Cruz and Ricky Martin. Orth was a creative consultant on the series. The Versace family was unhappy with how Gianni Versace was portrayed in both the book and the television show, stating that it presented a distorted and fictionalized account of the designer's life.

Cunanan moves out of his mother's apartment and lies to her that he is going to travel around the world with Versace.

However, the businessman refuses, after which Andrew is forced to get out of his mansion. Cunanan begins to feel depressed, which he tries to overcome with the help of drugs.

Two years later, Cunanan comes to Minneapolis to visit Trail and David Madson. Both men, however, try to avoid communicating with Andrew. Cunanan proposes marriage to Madson, but Madson refuses. An outraged Cunanan steals a registered pistol from Thrale's apartment.

1997 Cunanan, in the apartment of his lover, architect David Madson, beats to death Jeff Thrale with a nail hammer.

Andrew forces Madson to refuse to go to the police, explaining that they will both be recognized as suspects.

The police believe Madson is guilty of murder and are questioning his parents.

Meanwhile, Madson and Cunanan head to Mexico. When David accuses Andrew of lying, Cunanan realizes that he is disappointed in his lover, and kills Madson.
