Speaker 5

- A. I find them all so interesting! You know, every superstition has its own history. I love to learn where each one has come from and how it has changed. Our superstitions have even become a part of the way we think and speak. Every country in the world has its different superstitions, and I think they're absolutely fascinating!

Script

- Lucy: Oh, no, I can't believe it! What am I going to do now?
- Jane: Lucy, what's the matter?
- Lucy: I've just killed a poor little spider – look!
- Jane: Oh, dear! Try not to worry too much. It was an accident, after all.
- Lucy: That's not the point!
- Jane: What do you mean?
- Lucy: Well, killing a spider is bad luck! Didn't you know that?
- Jane: Oh, no! Now you'll never pass your exams or win that school writing competition you entered!
- Lucy: It's not funny, Jane! I'm really worried about it.
- Jane: I'm sorry. I don't mean to make fun of you, but REALLY, Jane! Killing a spider is bad luck? You don't really believe that, do you?
- Lucy: Yes, I'm quite superstitious, you know. I never go anywhere without my lucky charm.
- Jane: Well, I think superstitions are all a load of rubbish. I walk under ladders all the time and nothing bad ever happens ... hey, is that your mobile phone ringing?
- Lucy: Oh, yeah ... oh, it's Mrs Smith, the English teacher! Maybe I did win the competition!
- Jane: You see! Forget the spider! Quick, answer it. Perhaps it's your lucky day, after all!
