

Is it something that everybody in the class can relate to, to some extent?Are the students capable of dealing with the subject on a meaningful level, or is their English too much of a handicap?Is it something they might have talked, read or thought about much before?

How would you feel talking about the same thing in front of other people?

Ideas for topics

All the above criteria are met when learners talk about themselves.

Ask students to choose their own 'specialized subjects' and take five minutes each answering questions from the rest of the group / a small group about them. Most people have a pet hate. A lesson based on the BBC TV program Room 101 works well.

Hand over some control to the students by suggesting a list of possible discussion topics at the end of a class and asking them to decide which they would prefer to talk about the following week.

Ideas for setting up speaking tasks

- Take 'crime' as a topic.
 - Make role cards based on various stories.
 - Each student could write the headings Name / Crime / How Caught / Stupidity Rating 1-5
 - Taking a role, mingle and fill in this information for everybody they speak to within a set time limit.

Rank options in order of preference.

Role-plays can also encourage students to contribute.

Taking minutes.

The spoon.

Providing the tools

Many speaking games are wholly dependent on one grammar item or function. \rightarrow Interrupting game.

Give people the tools to speak. \rightarrow Cards saying I absolutely agree, I'm not so sure, I really don't think.

Activate the students' interest in the topic and get them thinking about it.

Pictures, especially photos, often generate hundreds of ideas with very little input from the teacher.

Realia works in a similar way to pictures.

Traditional warmers

20 Questions

What do you know about bananas?

I'm going on a picnic and I'm taking a ...

Mentioned books:

Cambridge Handbooks for Language Teachers Series Editor Scott Thombury

Jim Scrivener, Learning Teaching Paperback

Penny Ur, Andrew Wright Five-Minute Activities:

A Resource Book of Short Activities

Five-Minute Activities A resource book of short activities Penny Ur & Andrew Wright with illustrations by Andrew Wright Learning Teaching

Jim Scrivener

Macmillan Books for Teachers

