Divers for golf balls

Golf enthusiasts often notice teenagers on the playing field who collect lost balls, and then, for a small payment, return them back to the players. But, there is also a rarer profession - a diver for golf balls. It is a profession, because there are people for whom this is their main income.

Salary

Ball divers earn more than pearl divers, a professional gets up to $100,000 a year. In shops and factories, underwater hunters are not paid much – about 10 cents for one ball, but they also hand them over literally in bags. The catch of a professional is 3000-4000 balls per day. Enough to live on!

Thanks for attention.
