James Joyce Center

- a restored 18th-century Georgian townhouse
- the house has been renovated by James Joyce Society
- Joyce never lived in the house, but it connected with some Ulysses's characters

Exhibitions

- an interpretation of a bedroom like Joyce would have lived and worked
- furniture from Paul Leon's apartment in Paris, where Joyce wrote much of 'Finnegans Wake'

James Joyce Tower and Museum

- a Martello tower in Sandycove, Dublin, where James Joyce spent six nights (September 9–14) in 1904
- was leased from the British War Office by Joyce's university friend Oliver St. John Gogarty
- contains a museum dedicated to Joyce and displays some of his possessions
