

ALICE SPRINGS

"the Alice" or simply "Alice" is the third largest town in the Northern Territory, Alice Springs is situated in the geographic centre of Australia or the red center.

Alice Springs has a population of 28,605, which makes up 12.2 percent of the territory's population.

Alice Springs has many historic buildings such as the Old Courthouse and Residency and the Hartley Street School. Adelaide House, a stone building in the middle of the Mall, Australia's first hospital. It was also the site of the world's first successful portable wireless radio experiment conducted.

