

What does the phrase white lie mean?

M-W defines “white lie” as “a lie about a small or unimportant matter that someone tells to avoid hurting another person.” That's similar to the American Heritage definition: “An often trivial, diplomatic or well-intentioned untruth.”

White lies and black lies: What they have in common and how they differ. Black lies, or telling a lie to gain a personal benefit, are universally condemned. In contrast, white lies, or telling a lie to please another person, are seen as an innocent part of everyday interactions.

Read the story and answer did the narrator tell a white lie

It all began after work one day when some friends and I were talking about theme parks. A girl called Rosie said she loved big, scary rides, and for some reason, I said that I loved them too. What I should have said is that I'm terrified of them.

Two days later, Rosie told me that she had booked tickets for a group of us to go to a nearby theme park the following weekend. She insisted that I go and promised that I would love the roller-coaster because it was the highest and fastest in Europe!

When we arrived at the theme park, Rosie and her friends headed straight for the roller-coaster. As we stood in the queue, I became more and more nervous. By the time we reached the front of queue, I was panicking. I refused to go on the ride. I was so embarrassed, I went home on my own.

The next day, I spoke to Rosie and apologised for spoiling the trip. She was very sympathetic and didn't blame me at all for being afraid. What she couldn't understand was why I had lied in the first place – and neither can I!
