Australia's environment.

The Australian environment ranges from virtually pristine Antarctic territory and rainforests to degraded industrial areas of major cities. Forty distinct ecoregions have been identified across the Australian mainland and islands.

The people of Australia

Before the arrival of the British colonialists in 1788, Australia was inhabited by indigenous peoples-aborigines. Today, indigenous peoples make up 2.4% of the total population of Australia. 24 million people. The country's vast openness means it has the lowest population density in the world - only two people per square kilometre.

To its right, a dense cluster of skyscrapers, including the Sydney Tower Eye, rises against a sky with soft orange and pink hues. The city is reflected in the calm water of the harbor in the foreground.

Australia's economy

Australia is one of the world's leading producers of minerals. Gold played an important part in the nation's development. Among Australia's main mineral exports today are coal, iron ore, bauxite, lead, zinc, tin, and copper. There are also significant deposits of uranium. Australia is a major wheat exporting nation. Wheat represents almost 70 % of all the cereals grown in Australia. Other grain crops include barley, oats, corn, and rice. Fresh apples and canned and dried fruit are exported.
