The Russian Gate in Anapa

The Russian Gate in Anapa is a monument of the Ottoman military architecture of the XVIII century, the preserved gate of the Anapa fortress. A plate with the inscription «Russian Gate 1854» is mounted at the top of the gate. On the supporting wall there is another plate: «The fortress gate Remains of the Turkish fortress, built in 1783, named by the Russians in honor of the 25th anniversary of the liberation of Anapa from the Turkish yoke in 1828.»

Battery No. 394 of Captain A. E. Zubkov

During the Second World War, Zubkov's battery performed the main combat mission - the protection of Tsemesskaya Bay from enemy ships. In addition to the main combat mission, Battery No. 394 performed other tasks: it conducted live firing at ground and coastal targets, destroying enemy military equipment and manpower, provided fire support during the landing of amphibious landings on Malaya Zemlya and in the Novorossiysk port.

Memorial «Line of Defense» in Novorossiysk

The memorial complex is dedicated to the events of the summer and autumn of 1942, when Fascist troops rushed to the Caucasus to pave the way to the oil rigs of Baku and Grozny. On the line between the cement plants "October" and "Proletarian" the Wehrmacht army was stopped, so this place was chosen to create a monument-ensemble.

Memorial complex «Death Valley»

During the Great Patriotic War, the Malaya Zemlya bridgehead was located on the territory of the current "Valley of Death". Its area was small – only 30 sq. km. In 1943, the Fascist invaders, represented by German and Romanian troops, attacked this section of the city for a long 7 months. But our heroes - fathers, grandfathers, great-grandfathers - defended the Little Earth and gave us life.

As a sign of memory, honor, gratitude, in 1974, under the guidance of architect G. N. Najarian, the memorial complex "Death Valley" was created and opened.
