

New words

Tom Werner / DigitalVision / Getty

Regenuary noun [U]

UK /rɪˈdʒen.ju.ə.ri/ US /rɪˈdʒen.ju.er.i/

a movement organized in the month of January that encourages people to eat food that is seasonal, local and produced using regenerative farming techniques (= ways of farming land that aims to reverse the effects of climate change)

Over a quarter of a million people are taking part in this year's Veganuary – the campaign encouraging participants to try veganism for the 31 days of January. But a new movement called “Regenuary” is urging conscientious consumers to consider a different approach to eco-friendly eating.

[www.countryliving.com, 13 January 2021]

Regenuary

I voted for

It would encourage people to have more sustainable lifestyle

eco-aisle noun [C]

UK /'i:kəʊ.aɪl/ US /'i:kou.aɪl/

an aisle in a supermarket for food products that have been produced and packaged in a way that causes minimal harm to the environment

“We’ll see the beginning of the eco-aisle, where there’ll be dedicated space for products that reach a certain environmental criterion,” forecasts Morten Toft Bech, founder of Meatless Farm.

[thegrocer.co.uk, 15 January 2021]

Eco-aisle

Let's wait

It would work only in the cities

community fridge noun [C]

UK /kə'mjuː.nə.ti.fridʒ/ US /kə'mjuː.nə.ti.fridʒ/

a fridge, located in a public space, that is filled with donated food so that people who cannot afford to buy food can take what they need

There is a school in my Manhattan neighbourhood that has been giving out free meals during the pandemic – and every time I walk past it the line seems longer. A community fridge recently popped up a couple of blocks away; it's one of many that activists have installed across the city to combat growing food insecurity.

[theguardian.com, 11 August 2021]

Community fridge

I voted for

It's a good way to support people needing food

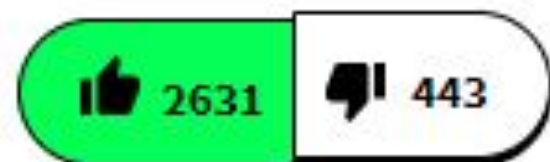

Mutual

Internet persona(s) who happens to follow you and you happen to follow them back and maintain communication with and have a mutual liking for each other whether it be friendship wise, etc. (Mutuals if more than one mutual)

Monica: Oh yay! I made a new mutual today because we started following & talking to eachother on twitter and we like eachother (so it seems).

by qthersurrection March 25, 2015

MAY 2 WORD OF THE DAY

chronic cringe

when you've done something so cringe you can't stop replaying it in your head and it stops you from getting on with your every day life

Dan: bro why have you been staring into space for the last hour doing nothing?

Me: bro i have a chronic cringe from what happened earlier I can't concentrate by finesseeee March 01, 2019

blamestorming

v. collectively or individually finding someone/something to blame for a problem, as opposed to brainstorming which connotes finding solutions to a problem

n. the act of finding someone/something to blame for a problem

(from a TV ad for HD television)

The committee commenced blamestorming over the situation rather than seeking solutions to the problem.*

by TBea April 22, 2008

