

MONOPOLY

A close-up photograph of various Monopoly game pieces. In the center, a light-colored wooden pawn stands upright. To its right is a white die showing the numbers 4, 5, and 6. To the left, another white die shows the numbers 1, 2, and 3. The foreground is filled with numerous colorful plastic houses in shades of blue, red, yellow, and purple, some of which are slightly out of focus. The background is dark and blurred, showing more game pieces. The word "MONOPOLY" is overlaid in white, bold, sans-serif capital letters across the middle of the image.

HISTORY OF CREATION

- Monopoly is an economic and strategic Board game for two or more people.
- In 1934, at the height of the great depression, Charles B. Darrow of Germantown, Pennsylvania, showed representatives of Parker Brothers project of the game Monopoly. The project was rejected due to “52 design errors”, but this did not stop the unemployed Charles, who decided to release the game on his own.

In 1935, with the help of a friend, Charles Darrow produced and sold 5,000 homemade copies of Monopoly in a Philadelphia Department store. After a while, he could not cope with the increased demand, and decided to contact the representatives of Parker Brothers again. Monopoly history — in 1936, it became the best-selling game in the United States.

Goal of the game

Rationally using the start-up capital, to achieve bankruptcy of other players. In fact, the "Monopoly" is a playing field consisting of squares that are passed around the circle by all players in turn. The squares are divided into an enterprise, a valuable item, and events. When a player gets a turn to walk, he determines the number of steps he must take on the playing field during this turn by throwing a die.

The basics

- Players take turns throwing dice and making the appropriate number of moves on the playing field. By entering a field with an asset, a player can purchase it if it is free, and if it belongs to another player, the player must pay for visiting this field according to the price list set by the rules. When visiting an event field, the player is instructed to follow the event that falls to them. Example: get additional funds from the Bank (the Bank is another player who interacts with human players through events occurring in the game), give some of their funds to the Bank, move to another field, give some of their funds to other players, skip their next move, get an additional move, and others.

Why is monopoly popular ?

Monopoly makes you feel like the owner of hotels, factories, teaches the basics of the economy, which are necessary for any novice businessman. The game gives you the opportunity to show the ability to be far-sighted, not afraid to make profitable investments. Also, this game it puts all the members of the family together .

The end

