Giving examples	For example ... For instance ... To illustrate, I'd like to talk about ... As an example ...
Involving others	How about you ...? What do you reckon ...? Over to you ... What are your thoughts on that ...?
Accepting other people's opinion	I see what you mean ... I see your point ... That's a good point ... I guess that's fair ...
Politely disagreeing	I'm afraid I have to disagree with you there ... I can't really agree with you there ...
Keeping the discussion moving	Shall we move on? Let's move on to the next question/picture ... Anyway, moving on ...
Giving your opinion	I guess I think ... I really believe ... I can't help but feel ... In my view ... I feel ... I reckon ...

Felicity: Do you think the way you dress says anything about who you are?

Boris: Er, well in my view, it doesn't. I guess I think there's a lot more to people than the clothes they wear.

Felicity: That's silly. Of course it says something. For example, if I see someone wearing designer brands, I automatically think they are rich. afraid I have to disagree

Boris: Well, that's a good point, but I'm with you there. They might not be rich at all – they might just love designer brands. Over to—

Felicity: Okay, but that's my point – it says something about them. Or maybe it says what they are not ... For instance, if someone is wearing designer brands, they are probably not poor, and they are probably somewhat concerned about the way the world perceives them. They want to look nice, otherwise they wouldn't spend so much on clothes.

Boris: I guess that's fair. What are your thoughts on that, Susan?

Susan: Oh, well, I don't know really. Shall we move on?

Discuss the questions below with a partner.

- Why do people buy designer brands?
- Why are designer brands so expensive?
- Are designer brands superior to normal brands?
- Do you think designer brands are becoming more popular? Will they become more popular in the future?
